

(Copyright, 1914.)

HE rain had come on a little after & as sudden and heavy as though it had been a midsummer thunder emptied Broadway more quickly. Men dodged into side streets, elbowed into

Above the sidewalk, twenty paces from the empty doorway where I lottered, an wning suddenly appeared, springing up toward one end of this awning circled a chain of broughams and taxicabs. As a men and women across the wet curb into

I stood there, watching the last of the that still seemed an elongated bull ring. where a matador or two still dodged the taurine charges of vehicles. I watched And even before I quite realized what he the fronic heavens pour their unabating floods down on that congested and overripe core of a city that no water could wash clean.

Then the desolation of the empty streets began to depress me.

I saw the lights of the theater more than twenty paces away. It was already a warren of crowded life. The thought of even what diluted companion ship it might offer me carried an appeal. A moment later I stood before its box office window.

"Standing room only," announced th autocrat of the wicket. And I meekly purchased my admission ticket, remem bering that the head of that particular theater had in the past done me more than one slight service. Yet the face of this haughtily obsequious head usher, as his hand met mine in that freemasonry which is perpetuated the doors that open on Forty-se by certain silk-threaded scraps of oblong paper, was troubled.

"I haven't a thing left," he whispered. "Unless you'll take a seat in that second

Even through the baize doors behind me I could hear the beat and patter of storm.

"That will do nicely," I told him. Yet it was not ordained that I should the brass rail and plush-covered parapet that barred it off from the more protuberant stage box, was already occupied by a man in full evening dress.

Yet I looked at this neighbor of mine as I seated myself, with more interest than I looked at the play actors across jewel thief. the footlights.

in front of him. As I followed the direction of his gaze I was further surprised doing his utmost to evade pursuit. to discover the object on which it was necklace encircling her throat.

staring at it. In the first place, it was an extraordinarily large and vivid stone. It was a challenge to attention. It swinging up on the step of a crosstown eaught and held the eye. It stood there. just below where the hair billowed into its crown of Venetian gold, as semaphoric as a yard lamp to a night traveler.

About the man himself there seemed little that was exceptional. Beyond a from this car on the northeast corner of certain quick and shrewd alertness in his ere movements as he looked about at me from time to time with a muffled resentment which I found not at all to my liking, he seemed medium in everything. in coloring, in stature, in apparel.

It may have been mere accident or it gaze arose some vague psychic force which disturbed this young woman, For as I sat there staring at the shimmering jewel, its wearer suddenly turned her head and glanced back at me. The next moment I was conscious of her nod and smile, unmistakably in my direction.

Then I saw who it was. I had been un couthly staring at the shoulder blades of Alice Churchill-they were the Park Avenue Churchills-and further back in the box I caught a glimpse of her brother

Yet I gave little thought to either of them. I must confess. At the same time that I had seen that momentarily flashing smile I had also discovered that the jeweled clasp on the girl's neck was holding in place a single string of graduated pearls-of very lovely pearls. I was also not unconscious of the quick and covert glance of the man who sat so close to

Then I let my glance wander back to the ruby, apparently content to study its perfect cutting and unmatchable coloring. nd I knew that the man beside me wa also sharing in that spectacle. I was, in fact, still staring at it, so unconscious of the movement of the play on the stage that the dark scene, when every light in the house went out for a second or two. came to me with a distinct sense of

A murmur of approval went through the house as the returning light revealed them a completely metamorphosed setting. What this setting was I not know, nor did I look up to see For as my idly inquisitive glance once more focused itself on the columnar white neck that towered above the chair was no longer any necklace there. The column of snow was without its touch of vuddy light.

My first definite thought was that I was the witness of a crime that was as auductions as it was bewildering. Yet, on second thought, it was simple enough, been solved. With the utter darkness had come the opportunity, the oppor tunity that obviously had been watched for. With one movement of the hand the necklace had been quietly and cunningly removed.

thief sat there in my immediate neighborhood. There could be no other. There was no room for doubt.

I sat there, compelling myself to carrier belt vomits grain into a mill bin, calmness which was not easy to achieve. so this unbroken chain ejected hurrying I struggled to make my scrutiny of this strange companion of mine as quiet as possible.

Yet he seemed to feel that he was still scattering crowd, watching the street under my eye. He did not turn and look at me directly, but it was plain that h was only too conscious of my presence was about, he reached quietly over, and taking up his hat and coat, rose to his feet and slipped out of the box. The sheer precipitancy of his flight was proof enough of his offense. His obvious effort to escape made me more than ever determined to keep on his trail. -

And keep on his trail I did, from the noment he sidled guiltily out of that ighted theater foyer into the still driz gling rain of Broadway. He was a good 200 feet ahead of me when I saw him suddenly veer about and dodge into a doorway. I promptly threw lecorum away and ran, rad like a rab bit, until I came to that doorway. I saw, as I passed through it, that it was nothing more than the Broadway entrance to the Hotel Knickerbocker. As I stepped into its pillared rotunda I caught sight of my quarry hurrying out through one of street.

I gained the open fust in time to se him dodging down into the klosk of a subway entrance. He was through the gate before I could catch up with him. I had no time to turn back and buy a ticket, for conductors were already slamthe rain. It was a case of any port in a ming shut the doors of a south-bound "local."

"Buy me a ticket," I called to the astonished "chopper," as I tossed a dollar occupy that box in lonely and unrivaled bill over the arm which he thrust out to splender. One of its chairs, set close to stop me. I did not wait to argue it out, for the car door in front of me was already beginning to close. I had just time to catapult my body in between that sliding door and its steel frame. I knew, as I caught my breath again, that I was on the platform of the car behind the

And I stood there carefully scrutinizing the line of car doors as we pulled into man, at the moment, was equally obliv- the Grand Central station. I did the ious of anything taking place on the same as we passed Thirty-third street, stage. His eyes, in fact, seemed fixed on and the same again at Twenty-eighth the snowy shoulders of the woman who street. The man had given no sign that sat at the back of the stage box directly he actually knew I was on his track. But I was certain of the fact that he was

This came doubly home to me as the He was staring, not at the train stopped at Twenty-third street and woman herself, but at a pigeon-blood I saw him step quickly out of the far end ruby set in the clasp of some pendant or of the car, look about him and dart across the station platform and up the stairway two steps at a time.

> I was afer him, even more hurriedly. By the time I reached the street he was of the question, but I waited a moment and swung aboard the one that followed it, 30 yards in the rear. Peering ahead. I could plainly see him as he dropped Sixth avenue. I could see him as he hurried up the steps of the elevated station, cross the platform, and without so much as buying a ticket hurry down the southeast flight of steps

I had closed in on him by this time, so that we were within a biscuit toss of each may have been that out of our united other. Yet never once did he look about. He was now doubling on his tracks, walking rapidly eastward along Twentythird street. I was close behind him as he crossed broadway, turning south, and then suddenly tacking about, he entered the Bartholdi Hotel. There he exactly repeated his maneuver of the Knicker bocker, circling around to the hotel's side entrance on Twenty-third street

Even as he emerged into the open again he must have seen the night-hawk cab raiting there at the curb. What his diections to the driver were I had no means of knowing. But as that dripping and waterproofed individual brought his whiplash down on his steaming horse a door slammed shut in my face:. Once nore I so far forgot my dignity as to dodge and run like a rabbit, this time to the other side of the cab as it swung briskly northward. One twist and pull threw the cab door open and I tumbled in-tumbled in to see my white-faced and frightened jewel thief determinedly and frenziedly holding down the handle on the opposite door.

His face went ashen as I came sprawling and lurching against him. He would have leaped bodily from the carriage, which was now swinging up an all but deserted Fifth avenue, only I caught and held him there with a grimness born of repeated exasperation.

He showed no intention of meekly submitting. Seeing that he was finally cornered, he turned on me and fought like a rat. His strength, for one of his weight, was surprising. Much more surprising, however, was his ferocity. And it was a strange struggle, there in the half light of that musty and manyodored nighthawk cab. And I knew, as we fought like two wharf rats under a pier end, that I was right. I knew that my cause was the cause of law and ora strength and a boldness which carried me through, even when I saw my writh-grasping for his hip-pocket, even when I I had expected. grasping for his hip-pocket, even when I saw him draw from it a magazine revoltiver that looked quite ugly enough to stampede a regiment. And as that sodden-leathered nighthawk went placidity rolling up Fifth agenue we twisted and panted and grunted on its floor as though. The charing distorted reflection in the political properties of the charing distorted reflection in the political presence there. I had for the moment taken him for my acrupalously attentive waiter. But as I turned about and represented.

V-ONE NIGHT OF RAIN

I sat looking at the girl with her town to see close behind me, so near my chair that even while I had already felt his presence there. I had for the moment taken him for my acrupalously attentive waiter. But as I turned about and looked up at this figure I saw that I was mistaken. My glance fell on a wideit were a mailcoach in the Sierras of studious yet imperso sixty years ago, fighting for the possession of that ugly firearm.

like a letter U. I held him there while I went through his pockets, quietly, deliberately, one by one, with all the care of customs inspector going through uspected smuggler. The one thing I wanted was the pearl necklace with the pigeon-blood ruby. And this necklace I found, carefully wrapped in a silk handkerchief tucked down in his right-hand waistcoat pocket-which, by the way, was provided with a buttone flap to make it doubly secure.

I looked over the neckince to make surthere could be no mistake. Then I again wrapped it up in the silk handkerchief and thrust it well down in my own waist "Get up!" I told the man on the

He lay back against the musty cushion breathing hard and staring at me out o eyes that were by no means kindly. "Don't imagine you can get away with that," he declared. I could afford to smile at his impotent fury. "Just watch me!" I told him. Then added, more soberly, with my hand on the doorknob, "and if you interfere with me after I leave this cab, if you so much as try to come within ten yards of me tonight. Ill give you what's coming to I opened the door as I spoke, ar dropped easily from the still moving cab went on up the avenue, with one door still swung open, and swaying back and forth like a hard slowly waving me the University Club, jumped into a wait-ing taxi and dodged back to the theater watched the final curtain come down. This pride became a feeling of elation as knew I was still destined to be the god from the machine. It was plain that she was still unconscious of her loss. was still unconscious of her loss.

I stopped her and her brother on their way out, surprising them a little, I suppose, by the unlooked-for cordiality of my greeting.

"Can't you two children take a bite with me at Sherry's?" I amiably sug-"Benny oughtn't to be

"But I've something rather important

"But I've sometime to talk over." I pleaded. "And Benny would like to get a gimpse of Sherry's again," interposed the shacked youth. And without ing and desperate thief groping and! I found it much harder, in fact, that with a newer note that made me look

I saw her guddenly lean forward in her chair, still looking at the grotesque im-age of herself in the polished silver. I quite knew. But when I came to my senses I had him on the cab floor and my knee on his chest, with his body bent up like a latter U. I had been to make the sense of the came to my suddenly up to her throat. I saw the floor and my suddenly up to her throat in m look of stupor that once more swept over

She ate a mouthful of capon, studiously without speaking. Then she looked up at us again. It was then that her brother, Eenny, for the first time noticed her change of color.

"What's wrong." he demanded.
The girl, when she answered him, spoke very quietly. But I could see what a struggle it was costing her.
"Now, Benny, I don't want any fuss," she said, almost under her breath. "I don't want ailly and said.

she said, almost under her breath. "I don: want either of you to get excited, for it can't do a bit of good. But my necklace is gone."

"Gone" gasped Benny. It can't be!"
"It's gone, she repeated, with her va ant eyes on me as her brother prodde and felt about her skirt, and then ever shook out her crumpled opera cloak.

It was then that I reached calmly down in my waistcoat pocket, for I knew that my moment had come.

"Does this happen to be it?" I asked, with all the nonchalance at my command. And as I spoke I unwrapped the string of pearls with the pigeon-holed ruby and let them roll out on the white damask that lay between us.

She looked at them without moving, her eyes wide with wonder. I could see the color come back on to her face.

"How," she asked a little weakly, as she reached over and took them up in her fingers, "how did you get them?"

"You lost them in the theater box during the first act." I told her. Her brother Benny wiped his forehead.

"And it's up to a woman to drop $40,000 and never know about it," he to the pavement. I stood there for a in her hands. Then she suddenly looked moment, watching its placid driver as he up at me, then down at the jewels, then op at me again. "This is not my necklace," were the astonishing words that I heard fall from her, lips,

"Oh, yes, they are." I quietly assured her.

"But I am left-handed," she explained, as she still looked down at them, "and I had my clasp, here on the ruby at the handed. Don't you see, it's on the wrong "But you've only got the thing upsid down," cried her brother. And I must confess that a disagreeable feeling be-gan to manifest itself in the pit of my stomach as he moved closes beside her stomach as he moved closer beside her and tried to reverse the necklace so that the clasp would stand a left-handed one. He twisted and turned it fruitlessly for mured, sinking back in his chair and re-garding me with puzzled eyes. But his bewilderment was nothing as compared to mine. I reached over for

But his bewilderment was nothing as compared to mine. I reached over for the string of pearis with the ruby clasp. I took them and turned them over and over in my hands, weakly, mutely, as though they themselves might in some way solve an enigma which seemed inscrutable. I was still looking down at that lustrous row of pearis, so appealing to the eye in their absolute and perfect graduation, when I heard the younger man at my side call my name aloud.

"Kerfoot!" he said, not exactly in alarm and not precisely in anxiety, yet and not precisely in anxiety, yet up sharply,

As I did so I was conscious of the fig-den-leathered nighthawk went placidly which I had just served her with capon waiter. But as I turned about and a la reine. She sat there gazing at her looked up at this figure I saw that I was panted and grunted on its floor as though reflected face, gazing at it with a sort of mistaken. My glance feel on a wide-reflected face, gazing at it with a sort of shouldered and rather portly man with quiet and very deep-set gray eyes. What disturbed me even more than ence there at my shoulder

> "About what?" I demanded trying to match his impassivity with my own. He nodded toward the necklace in my

> "About that," he replied.
> "What about that?" I languidly in-

The portly man at my shoulder did not answer me. Instead, he turned and nod-ded toward a second man, a man stand-ing half a dozen paces behind him, in a np overcoat and a sadly, crumple

I felt my heart beat faster, of a sud den, for it took no second glance to tell me that this second figure was the jewel thief whom I had trailed and cornered in the musty-smelling cab.

I felt the larger man's sudden grip on my shoulder—and his hand seemed to have the strength of a vise—as the smaller man, still pale and disheveled, stepped up to the table. His face was not a pleasant one.

Benny Churchill, whose solicitous eyes bent for a moment on his sister's startled face, suddenly rose to his feet. "Sit down." I told him. "For heaven's sake sit down, all of you! There's nothing to be gained by heroics. And if we've anything to say, we may as well say it decently."

The two men exchanged glances as I cridered the two chairs for them.

"He so good," I continued, motioning them toward these chairs. "And since we have a problem to discuss, there's no reason we can't discuss it in a semi-civilized manner." "It's not a problem," said the man at my shoulder, with something disagree-ably like a sneer.

The man behind me was the first to drop into the empty seat on my left. The other man crossed to the farther side of other man crossed to the farther side of the table, still watching me closely. Then he felt for the chair and slowly sank into it; but not once did he take his eyes from my face.
"That man's armed, remember!" the jewel thief suddenly cried to the stranger on my left. He spoke both warningly and indignantly. His flash of anger, in fact, seemed an uncontrollable one. "Where's your gun?" said the quiet-eyed man at my side. His own hand eyed man at my side. His own hand was in his pocket, I noticed, and there was a certain malignant line of purpose about his mouth which I did not at all

Yet I was able to laugh a little as put the magazine revolver down on able; it had memories which "Where'd you get that gun?" he in quired.

I nodded my head toward the faced man opposite me.
"I took it away from your friend there," was my answer.
"And what else did you take?"

"And what else use you.
There was something impressive abo the man's sheer impersonality.
"This pearl necklace with the ru clasp," I answered.
"Why?" demanded my interlocutor.
"Why?" demanded my interlocutor.

"Because he stole it," was my promite retort.

"Who from?"

"Frem the lady you have the honor facing." I answered.

"Where" was his next question.

I told him where. He was again sile.

"D' you know who this man is?" he said, with a curt head nod toward his white-faced colleague.
"Yes." I answered.
"What is he?".
"He's a jewel thief."
The two men stared at each other. Then the man at my side rubbed his chin between a meditative thumb and forefinger. He was plainly puzzled. He looked at Alice Churchill and at her brother, and then back at me again.
Then, having once more absently carcesed his chin, he swung about and faced the wondering and silent girl who sat opposite him.
"Excuse me, Mins, but would you mind answering a question or two."
If was her brother who spoke before she had time to answer.

he had time to answer. "Just who are "Walt," he interposed. "Just who are ou, anyway?"

The man, for answer, lifted the lapel of his coat and exhibited a silver badge. "Well, what does that mean?" demand-ed the quite unimpressed youth. "That I'm an officer."

what? For this place?"
for the Maiden Lane Protective "Well, what's that got to do with us?

The large-codled man looked at him a little impatiently. "You'll understand that when the time

The girl nodded. 'Yes, I must have," she answered, looking a little frightened.

"And you say it was stolen from you?"
"No, I didn't say that. I had my neck-lace on when I was in the box-both Benny and I know that.

"I noticed it was gone when I sat down t the table here. dominating gentleman turned

"I did," was my answer. manded.

The jewel thief with the crumpled shirt front tried to break in at this functure, but the bigger man silenced alm with an impatient side swing of the "What difference does it make?" I calmly inquired, resenting the peremptor-ness of his interrogations.

He stopped short and looked up at me.

Then the first ghost of a smile, a patient witnessed this man across the table t the necklace from the young lady? "It practically amounts to that "I don't think I said that."

"But you assumed he comm rime?

Rather."

fore that change, and gone when the lights were turned on again?"

"And the position and actions of this nan were suspicious to you?

"Extremely so." "In what way? different ways

"He had crowded suspiciously close to the wearer of the necklace?" "And his eyes were glued on it during the early part of that act?"

"They certainly were."
"And you watched him?"
"With almost as much interest as he watched the necklace.

"And after the dark change, as you

"You were sure of this?" "Positively

"And what did this man across the Having got what he was after, turried out of the theater and made scape-or tried to make his escape.

"It embarrassed him, I suppose. "He certainly looked embarrassed."
"He certainly looked embarrassed."
"Of course," admitted my interrogator.
Then he sighed deeply, almost contentedly, after which he sat with contemplative nd pursed-up lips.

"I guess I've got this whole snarl low," he complacently admitted. "All but one kink "What one kink?" demanded Benny Churchill.

nim. Instead, he rose to his feet.
"I want you to come with me." he had the effrontery to remark, with a curt head not in my direction.
"I much prefer staying here." I resorted. And for the second time he miled his saddened smile.

"Oh, it's nothing objectionable," he ex-plained. "Nobody's going to hurt you. And we'll be back here in ten minutes," "But, oddly enough, I have rooted ob-jections to deserting my guests." "Your guests won't be sorry, I imagine," he replied, as he looked at his silver turnip of a watch. "And we're e go," said Alice Churchill, emoldened, apparently by some instinctive enclusion which she could not, or did not care to explain.

I also noticed, as I rose to my feet, that I still held the necklace in my hand. I was a little puzzled as to just lady keep it until we get back, And you, Fessant," he went on, turning to the belligerent-lipped jewel thief, "you stay right here and make yourself pleasant. And without bein' rude, you might see that the young lady and her brother stay right here with you."

Then he took me companionably by the arm and led me away.
"What's the exact meaning of all this?" I inquired as we threaded our course out to the cab stand and went g wantward sieng Forty-third in a taxi. The rain, I noticed h the fogged window, was still

"I want you to show me exactly where man sat in that box." was his an-"And what good," I inquired, "is that

"And what good, I inquire, going to do me?"

"It may do you a lot of good," he retorted, as he flung open the cab door.

"I feel rather gorry for yo? if it doesn't," was my answer as I followed him out. We had drawn up before a desolate looking stage door over which burned an even more desolate looking electric bulb. The man turned and looked at me with a short ghost of a grunt,

"You're pretty nifty, aren't you, for New York comion of Jesse James?"

iking there when the door itself was ened by a man in a gray uniform, ob-usly the night watchman.

Doorman gone?"
"Bout an hour ago!"

"Didn't hear of it!" was throw on the house Watch your way!"

He preceded us through a maze of painted canvas and what looked like the backs of gigantic picture frames. He stepped aside for a moment to turn on a switch. Then he opened a narrow door covered with sheet iron, and we found urselves facing the box entrance

My companion motioned me into the second box while he stepped briskly into that nearer the footlights.

"Now, the young lady sat there," he said, placing the gilt chair back against the brass railing. Then he sat down in it, facing the stage. Having done so, he it, facing the stage. Having done so, he took off his hat and placed in on the box floor. "Now you show me man sat."

I placed the chair against the plush-covered parapet and dropped into it. "Here," I explained, "within two feet

"Here," I expand f where you are."
"All right!" was his sudden and quite
"All right!" was his sudden and quite
"That's enough." He reached down and groped about for his hat before rising from the chair. He brushed it with the sleeve of his coat, absently, and then stepped out of the box.

"We'd better be getting back," he called to me from the sheet-iron covered

"Back to what?" I demanded, as I followed him out through the canvas-lined maze again, feeling that he was in some way tricking me, resenting the foolish mystery which he was flinging about the whole foolish maneuver. "Back to those guests of you some good old-fashloned common was his retort.

was his retort.

But during the ride back to Sherry's he had nothing further to say to me. His answers to the questions I put to hin were either evastive or monosyllabic. He even yawned, yawned openly and audi bly, as he drew up at the carriage en-trance of that munificently lighted hostelry.

"Now I can give you people just two minutes," he said, as the five of us were once more seated at the same table and he once more consulted his turnip of a watch. "And I guess that's mor'en we'll rie turned to the wan and tired-eyed girl, who, only too plainly, had not altogether enjoyed her wait.

"You've got the necklace?" he asked. She held up a hand from which the string of graduated pearls dangled. The man then turned to me.

"You Took this string of pearls away from this man?" he asked with a surely He turned to the wan and tired-eyed from this man?" he asked, with a quick nod toward the jewel thief.

"I assuredly did," was my answer,
"Knowing he had taken them from this young lady earlier in the evening"
"Your assumption bears every mark of genius!" I assured him.
He turned back to the girl.

"Is that your necklace?" he curtly de-

"You're positive?" She nodded her head without speaking, him and forcibly took away from him?" "Hold on!" I cried, angered by that calmly pedagogic manner

He stopped me with a sharp move

The gird nodded. "Then what the devil is this man doing with it?" demanded Benny Churchill, be-

"S'pose you wait and find out who this man is!" Well, who is he" I inquired, resolved that no hand, however artful, was going

"Hold there, my friend," cut in the big-limbed man. "He found this lady was going to be in that box and wearin' that

"And having reviewed its chaste and naving beauty, he sneaked out of his own box and ran like a chased cur!"
"Hold your horses, now! Can't you see that he thought you were the crook? If you had a bunch of stones like that on you and a stranger butted in and started to the control of the contr you and a stranger on the interest of the melt away when you had the chance?" demanded the officer. Then he looked at me again with his wearily uplifted eyebrows. "Oh, I guess you were all right as far as you went, but, like all right as far as you went, but, like most amateurs, you didn't go quite far enough."

I saw the girl across the table from It saw the girl across the table thou me push the necklace away from her, and leave it lying there in a glimmering heap upon the white table. I promptly and quietly reached out and took possession of it, for I still had my own ideas of the situation.

"That's all very well," I cried, "and care interesting. But what I want to very interesting. But what I want to know is: Who got the first necklace?" The big-framed man looked once more at his watch. Then he looked a little

"I got 'em!" he said.
"You've got them?" echoed both the girl and her brother. It was plain that the inconsequentialities of the last hour had been a little too much for them.

The man thrust a huge hand down in the resert of his damm and somewhat

"And I guess that's about all." he add-

What kind-a detective?"

comes," was his retort.
"Now, young lady," he began again, swinging back to the puzzled girl. "Deyou say you lost a necklace in that theater box?"

"And it disappeared?"

ound to me.
"You saw the necklace from the second he asked. "And you saw it disappear?" he dend almost sorrowful smile, came to his 'Well, we'll go at it another way. You

"That is, you actually detected him

"Just when was it committed?"
"During what they call a dark change in the first act."
"You mean the necklace was on bemanded.

The girl looked at me, with clouded and troubled eyes. We all felt, in some feelish way, that the moment was a climatic one,
"No," she answered, in little more than

The man turned to me.
"Yet you followed this man, assaulted

"Don't go over all that!" he said. "It's a waste of time. The point is, that neck-lace is not your friend's. But I'm going to tell you what it is. It's a duplicate of it, stone for stone. The lady, I think, will agree with me on that.

that no hand, however artful, was going to pull the wool over my eyes.

"This man," said my imperturbed and big-shouldered friend. "is the pearl-matcher for Cohen & Greenhut, the Malden Lane importers. Wait, don't interrupt me. Miss Churchill's necklace. I understand, was one of the finest in this town. His house had an order to duplicate it. He took the first chance, when the pearls had been matched and strung to see that he'd done his job right."

"And you mean to tell me," I cried, "that he hung over a box rail and lifted is string of pearls from a lady's neck just to—" the pocket of his damp and somewhat unshapely coat.

"Yes, I got 'em here," he explained as he drew his head away and heal the glimmering string up to the light. "I picked 'em up from the corner of that box where they slipped off the lady's neck.

"And I suggest the street of the lady's neck."

"You're pretty nifty, aren't you, for New York edition of Jesse James?"
And without waiting for my answer up his coat collar, "except that some of se began kicking on the shabby looking age door with his foot. He was still this rain keeps up."